Not illustrated. 1823 Excerpt: ...thy worke, though thou beest hardly prest; Labour is held up by the hope of rest. LEPROSIE IN CLOATHES. When flowing garments I behold, Enspird with purple, pearle, and gold; I think no other, but I see In them a glorious leprosie, That dos infect, and make the rent More mortall in the vestiment. As flowrie vestures doe descrie The wearers rich immodestie; So plaine and simple cloathes doe show Where vertue walkes, not those that flow. UPON BUGGINS. Buggins is drunke all night; all day he sleepes; This is the levell-coyle that Buggins keeps. GREAT MALADIES, LONG MEDICINES. To an old soare a long cure must goe on; Great faults require great satisfaction. HIS ANSWER TO A FRIEND. You aske me what I doe, and how I live? And, noble frieud, this answer I must give: Drooping, I draw on to the vaults of death, Ore which youl walk when I am laid beneath. THE BEGGER. Shall I a daily begger be, For loves sake asking almes of thee? Still shall I crave, and never get A hope of my desired bit? Ah, cruell maides! He goe my way; Whereas, perchance, my fortunes may Find out a threshold or a doore, That may far sooner speed the poore: Where thrice we knock, and none will heare, Cold comfort still Im sure lives there. BASTARDS. Our bastard children are but like to plate, Made by the coyners illegitimate-HIS CHANGE. My many cares, and much distress, Has made me like a wilderness; Or, discomposd, Im like a rude, And all confused multitude; Out of my comely manners worne, And as in meanes, in minde all torne. THE VISION. Methought I saw, as I did dreame in bed, A crawling vine about Anacreons head; Flusht was his face, his haire with oyle did shine, And as he spake, his mouth ranne ore with wine; Tipld he was, and tipling, lispt withall, And lispng reeld, and reelin...
