Not illustrated. 1900 Excerpt: ...has more right to interfere than I. But its a disagreeable affair all round. What a character for anybody with decent connections to show himself in!--one of those newspaper fellows I You have only to look at Keck, who manages the Trumpet. I saw him the other day with Hawley. His writing is sound enough, I believe, but hes such a low fellow, that I wished he had been on the wrong side. What can you expect with these peddling Middlemarch papers? said the rector. I dont suppose you could get a high style of man anywhere to be writing up interests he doesnt really care about, and for pay that hardly keeps him in at elbows. Exactly: that makes it so annoying that Brooke should have put a man who has a sort of connection with the family in a position of that kind. For my part, I think Ladislav is rather a fool for accepting. It is Aquinass fault, said Mrs. Cadwallader. Why, didnt he use his interest to get Ladislav made an attache or sent to India? That is how families get rid of troublesome sprigs. There is no knowing to what lengths the mischief may go, said Sir James, anxiously. But if Casaubon says nothing, what can I do? Oh, my dear Sir James, said the rector, dont let us make too much of all this. It is likely enough to end in mere smoke. After a month or two Brooke and this Master Ladislav will get tired of each other; Ladislav will take wing; Brooke will sell the Pioneer, and everything will settle down again as usual. There is one good chance--that he will not like to feel his money oozing away, said Mrs. Cadwallader. If I knew the items of election expenses I could scare him. Its no use plying him with wide words l...
